"MAJOR IN MINUTES" FACULTY-LED CLASS OPTIONS

BIOLOGY: Immunology - How Do We Defend Ourselves From Harmful Pathogens?
Generac Hall - S141 (first floor)
Dr. John Werner, Associate Professor of Biology

Humans are under constant bombardment from harmful microbes but, thankfully, we have a built-in defense mechanism called the immune system. In this course we will examine the incredible strategies the human body uses to defend itself from bacteria, viruses, and other invaders. We will also discuss how vaccines work to prevent serious illness.

BUSINESS: A New Approach to Leadership Training
Generac Hall - S105 (first floor)
Dr. Donald Kudek, School of Business Chair and Assistant Professor of Business Administration

Billions of dollars are spent annually to train individuals to be better leaders. However, a key component of that training is normally missing. Find out what that missing component is and why it is critical to incorporate.

COMMUNICATION: Surviving Groups: Teaching Students Essential Skills in Small Group Communication
Generac Hall - S151 (first floor)
Dr. Jerralyn Moudry, School of Professional Communication Chair and Professor of Communication

Dr. Aimee Lau '03, Associate Professor of Communication

Working in groups is a mixed bag. Most of us can recount great experiences as well as incredibly frustrating interactions. This session will highlight the value of learning skills in small group communication for our students' professional and personal lives. Come and experience the uniquely interactive approach that allows our students to learn about groups while participating in groups.

MUSIC: The Internet Killed the Video Star: The Music Industry in the Digital Age
Generac Hall - S109 (first floor)
Dr. Jeremy Zima '07, Assistant Professor of Music

One of the main themes in my American Popular Music class is how changes in technology influence the production and consumption of popular music. In this presentation, we'll look at how new technologies like streaming and social media have changed the music industry landscape in the last 20 years, leading to a massive shift in the way music is made, heard, and experienced.

NURSING: Explore the WLC Nursing Labs
Generac Hall - Meet in S112A (first floor)
School of Nursing Faculty

Explore the School of Nursing's state-of-the-art simulation labs during a guided tour with members of the faculty and students.

SPORT AND EXERCISE SCIENCE: Healthy Habits
Generac Hall - S011 (lower level)
Prof. Bethany Zeitler '17, Head of Physical Education and Assistant Lecturer of Sport and Exercise Science

For many students, college is the first time that they alone are responsible for planning their own meals, making time to exercise, and managing a variety of responsibilities. This is also an optimal time to set the groundwork for habits (good or bad!) that will impact life after college. In this session, we will discuss simple healthy strategies related to food choice, physical activity, and time management that can become the foundation for lifelong healthy habits.
